Most notable among these was Lu Dongbin, a legendary Daoist immortal that many believed was originally a Confucian teacher. Taoism: Growth of a Religion.

“Emotions that Do Not Move”: Zhuangzi and Stoics on Self

To get at the contribution of Daoism to understanding the human problem of global climate change it is necessary to understand in more detail how the correspondence between the body and its environment functions. The life force was transformed to be form, form was transformed to become life, and now birth has transformed to become death. To the Daoist mind—and body—this synchronic, correlative thinking is just as necessary as diachronic cause and effect to understand the whole range of relationships that obtains within nature, understood as an evolving organic system of diverse processes.

Chinese Philosophy and Chinese Medicine (Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy)

From a Daoist point of view, Confucian concern with civilization, culture and moral cultivation reflected a bias toward artificiality and toward unnecessary and arbitrary distinctions. It is one of the two foundational texts of Daoism.
