Television or Democracy?

After all, he won a third term. TV not only treats citizens as consumers; it corrupts politics.

Television, FDR and the 1940 Presidential Conventions

FDR stands with his son, FDR, Jr. As for his show, it is stagy and bombastic.

Democracy Now: A Look At The Future Of Television

According to him, the individual can establish a remote or a resistance to them. JUAN GONZALEZ: Well, Jeff, specifically with the Obama administration, the issue of net neutrality is increasingly a big topic at the FCC. In addition, some saw the exchange of political views from a close-up camera angle, whereas others saw the same event from a more distant camera perspective.

The Effect Of 'In Your Face' Political Television On Democracy

JEFF CHESTER: Well, this is a very critical moment for the future of US and, of course, global digital communications. To get people to know or care about matters of national urgency, enough to figure out what the rules are and how they are rigged against us, you have to get them interested enough to pay attention and hopeful enough to believe that their attention and consideration will, potentially, let them into the game. There will be — there should be — times when every man in politics...will wish that it had never been created.

We need public television to power our democracy

Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission James Fly third from left with a new commercially available television, 1939. First, does televised political discourse familiarize viewers with political perspectives they disagree with? John Nance Garner was being retired. A mirror was required to view the screen.

Television, FDR and the 1940 Presidential Conventions

An internal White House note regarding the cancellation of television installation plans at the White House, December 19, 1938.
