Shadows on the Mountain: The Allies, the Resistance, and the Rivalries that Doomed WWII Yugoslavia by Marcia Christoff Kurapovna

The tragedies the British mission leaders endured in Yugoslavia neither deterred their absolute dedication to the fulfillment of their duty, nor diminished the profound emotional investment of these men in that broken and heartbreaking land. This book is historical revisionism.

Trial of Mihailović et al.

In this story he is the personification of the theme of complete and utter mistrust among friends and allies. For example, a joint Ustaše-German massacre of Serbs in the Kožara mountains in the spring of 1941, when 40,000 Serb peasants in the villages surrounding it were captured and sent to Jasenovac, a concentration camp TH E MO UNTA I N AT D AWN 65 about sixty miles from Zagreb, inspired outrage from the Partisans. We were aware, too, that Mussolini had intended settling scores with us at the end of 1939 and the beginning of 1940 but had been checked each time by the Germans, who did not consider it to be in their interest to have a conflagration in the Balkans.

General Draža Mihailovich: on the Mountain: The Allies, The Resistance, and the Rivalries that Doomed WWII by Marcia Kurapovna

The first company of this division, mostly men from Bosnia-Herzegovina, arrived on March 29, 1918, having traveled fourteen thousand miles in eleven weeks.

Shadows on the Mountain: The Allies, the Resistance, and the Rivalries that Doomed WWII Yugoslavia

With a major military debacle behind him and a skeptical set of bosses back home, enormous pressure was put on the fifty-eight-year-old general and the expanded Allied armies in Macedonia.

A portent of his worst battles to come, however, was evident as early as his young military days on the battlefields of C'er: the Drina and the Kolubara rivers. The cynical interpretation of their change of heart was that in the event of victory, London did not want the French to have the territorial upper hand in the postwar Near East. In late 1942, the ambassador of the Yugoslav government in exile in London, Constantine Fotić, had made several direct appeals to President Franklin Roosevelt concerning the gravity of the ideological struggle in Yugoslavia.
