Myanmar's coup splits an already deeply divided region

Now, General Min Aung Hlaing can take the initiative to ban the NLD or the National League for Democracy because only Aung San Suu Kyi has the popular support to challenge him

ASEAN Diplomacy in Conflict Resolution: The Cambodian Case

Current Dynamics- Myanmar Actors and International Response The 1 February military coup in Myanmar and subsequent arrests among senior civilian leaders of the National League for Democracy NLD including Aung San Suu Kyi did not come as a complete surprise. A new configuration of major powers began to emerge a decade after the fall of the Berlin Wall created a regional economic and political landscape that allowed friends and foes to join hands and chase joint development and cooperation. The key issue that must now be addressed is that of national reconciliation—the Paris Treaty had occurred more as a result of the changed international scenario rather than any real effort at reconciliation between the warring factions and this has proved to be the biggest hurdle in the path of national reconstruction.
