Changes in Police Discretion C.

Chapter 1: What Is Community Engagement?

They also had the opportunity to share experiences and challenges. Support a Police Athletic League or other sports project? However some police officers, once they have gained a rapport with the community leader s , provide their personal cell phone number so that there is immediate communication if needed.

Developing Partnerships in the Community

Though vital to public safety, its existence is often taken for granted. I am proud to say our officers and even the city prosecutor played in the tournament this year and it went off without a hitch. And there are many other examples of how police officers around the United States have built trust and established ongoing community relationships just by taking the steps to address an issue that is important to that community.

Does this mission statement reflect the realities ever yday police work in Los Angeles? For the Lincoln Police Department, the surveys provide insight into the perception of its police practices by the community. For example, if a police department is considering providing Tasers for use by its officers, police leaders should consult with the community and describe why they are considering using the technology. Each offi cer exercises discretion when deciding whether to issue citations or mak e ar rests when laws are violated.
