The Foster Care Crisis: The Shortage Of Foster Parents In America

The province did not track the number of non-status Indigenous children taken into care.

Foster care replaced residential schools for Indigenous children, advocates say

By 1964 there were almost 1,500 Indigenous kids in care, just over one-third of all kids in care. .

Like every social issue facing Indigenous people in Canada, the origins date back to colonization. Considering the volume of law enforcement interaction that system dependent children have via court, crisis intervention, placement removals, etc.

Foster care replaced residential schools for Indigenous children, advocates say

So as a child, I believed black kids in group homes, myself included, were bad. The court case revealed that several children died while in state care while many others suffered instances of abuse or neglect in the system. The first call to action is to reduce the number of Indigenous children in care by monitoring neglect investigations, providing accurate resources, training and educating social workers in the history and impacts of residential schools, Indigenous cultures and communities and ensuring that child-welfare decision makers take into account the impact of residential schools on Indigenous children and their families.
