Four Gentlemen

The Four Gentlemen have been used in Chinese painting since the time of the 960—1279 because of their refined beauty, and were later adopted by artists in Korea, Japan, and Vietnam. Bamboos are straight, representing the straight characters of a gentleman; bamboos are hollow in the middle, representing tolerance and generosity. In line with the wide use of nature as imagery in literary and artistic creation, the Four Gentlemen are a recurring theme for their symbolism of uprightness, purity, humility, perseverance against harsh conditions, among other virtues valued in the Chinese traditions.

The 'gentleman' of Chinese teas[1]

According to a local legend, which is, of course, unconfirmed, the pool is believed to have a dragon in it. ORCHID The interesting thing about orchid is that the most valuable and rare flowers grow in remote mountains. You see this flower in many Chinese and Korean dramas, often as a pet plant of highly educated people.
