Basics of a Trade Secret Claim

. This could include formulae and recipes, proprietary databases, business processes and methods, information about costs, pricing, margins, overhead, manufacturing processes, proprietary computer software programs, customer lists, and strategic plans and marketing programs. What May Be Protected as a Trade Secret? The UTSA worked for many years, but difficulty with interstate and international enforcement eventually led the federal government to act.

18 U.S. Code § 1832

Take for example the formula for Coca-Cola -- right now, virtually no one knows what it is, so it is secret.

The Law of Trade Secret Litigation Under the Uniform Trade Secrets Act, Second Edition

Other Notable Provisions The DTSA additionally mandates that, within one year of enactment and every six months thereafter, the Attorney General submit a publicly available report on, inter alia: 1 the scope and breadth of theft of trade secrets of American companies occurring outside of the United States; 2 the extent to which theft outside the United States is sponsored by foreign governments or instrumentalities; 3 the ability of trade-secret owners to prevent misappropriation of trade secrets outside of the United States; and 4 recommendations for actions that may be undertaken to reduce the threat of misappropriation of trade secrets of American companies occurring outside of the United States. This new law has attracted much media attention and the potential for large damage awards or settlements. For example, most employees who work in a commercially sensitive field are required to sign a contract prohibiting them from disclosing their employer's trade secrets to a competitor or the general public.

Trade Secret Law legal definition of Trade Secret Law

In recognizing the need for stronger, more robust trade secret protection, Congress enacted the DTSA as an amendment to the Economic Espionage Act, a federal criminal statute, to include a private civil cause of action. This is a must-have resource for trade secret litigators seeking the best published cases supporting their claims, and for others who want a better understanding of UTSA case law.

Trade Secret Law legal definition of Trade Secret Law

New York State does not have any statutes covering trade secrets and is one of only two states that have not adopted the Uniform Trade Secrets Act. In return the invention must be described in detail to the Patent Office which publishes the information, thus increasing the amount of technological knowledge available to the public. However, many states have amended this section of the UTSA, so the statute of limitations for trade secrets claims varies between three and five years depending on the state.
