Reprography is subject to the provisions of current copyright legislation and, if applicable, to the permission of depositors. During the interwar period, some innovative historians of Parliament did nonetheless look beyond Westminster and tried to account for the 'social foundations' of politics, most notably. The 1918 Franchise Act had enfranchised all men over the age of 21 and many propertied women of 30 and over, and the wider electorate favoured the Labour Party, endorsed the Conservative Party as the party of the nation, and left the Liberal Party in sharp decline.
