They were an obvious reflection of the new directions of state science policy: to mobilize, isolate, plan, and Bolshevize Soviet science. .

Bibliography in: The Slavic Dossier

Experimental sciences began to supersede an empirical tradition in medicine by the 1840s and within the next decade experimental physiology, medical chemistry, cellular pathology, and medical histology had evolved as clearly defined laboratory disciplines. They became embroiled in the religious conflicts and political games of the Russian court, and they managed to survive them, if somewhat bruised.
