But still in the main the lines drawn at Versailles in 1919 are holding, and the democratically governed nations are on top. By the time stock values hit bottom on 13 November investors had lost enough money to finance World War I once, or pay off the national debt twice! The railroad stations, too, were jammed with people—not only vacationists and week-enders but boy and girl campers returning to town en masse; never had Labor Day traffic been so overwhelming, or the collective discomfort of Labor Day travel been greater.

Once elected FDR immediately launched his various alphabet soup-like  $\frac{1}{2}$ New Deal $\frac{1}{2}$  programs: they included the NRA to deal with economic planning, wages and working conditions, child and women $\frac{1}{2}$ s labor, etc. For instance, I always believed Hoover did nothing to offset the depression. Stock transactions sometimes became so hectic that Wall Street could not keep up with the paperwork no computers! Between the crash of  $\frac{1}{2}29$  and the presidential election of 1932, however, there was no visible improvement in the economy.

But he also provided repeated premature assurances that all would soon be back in order. Presidential Responses to the Great Depression In a response that would set a precedent for Republican administrations in the intervening 90 years, President Hoover relied on tax cuts and deregulation to stimulate the economy. This is not a hard-hitting expose' of the Depression years, but it is a highly informative book that is a great lesson in history.
