Perhaps for the reason that I have been reading Barthes time-to-time the past twenty years or so.

John Dryden's satiric poetry

In Absalom and Achitophel, Dryden writes as a pen for the Tory party. I can see Eire from Arran. I guess the challenge is to find the analysis that avoids being too high-level and simply does not accurately reflect what is occurring in any one location, and avoids being so specific that your observations and conclusions do not apply to any other circumstance other than the one you are analysing.
