Apart from the use of a single name, cognomen, or, in some cases gentilicium only, in the addresses probably the result of abbreviation by scribes a good many men are referred to by cognomen only in the body of the letters writers, Catullus, Calvus, Cicero, etc. They deal with a great variety of subjects: the description of a Roman villa; the charms of country life; the reluctance of people to attend author's readings and to listen when they were present; a dinner party; legacy-hunting in ancient Rome; the acquisition of a piece of statuary; his love for his young wife; ghost stories; floating islands, a tame dolphin, and other marvels. Pliny's Family 3 Pliny tells Trajan in x 2.
