Poisk (ISS module)

Streszczenie: Abstract In the past 50 years a large number of medieval German texts have appeared in editions which provide translations, mostly in prose, and very often on the pages facing the medieval original. The article examines some of the comments made by the scholars responsible for bilingual texts, in particular comments for their German readers on the perceived difficulties associated with interference, and the rationale which seems to justify the almost universal choice of prose for translations of verse. In addition, Progress crafts are preferred for Zvezda's aft port as this enables them to perform ISS reboosts using their main engines.
