Foreign candidates Marriage negotiations constituted a key element in Elizabeth's foreign policy. Elizabeth confronted Mary about the marriage, writing to her: How could a worse choice be made for your honour than in such haste to marry such a subject, who besides other and notorious lacks, public fame has charged with the murder of your late husband, besides the touching of yourself also in some part, though we trust in that behalf falsely.

Elizabeth I: TRANSLATIONS, 1592

She was eventually succeeded by her first-cousin twice-removed, , laying the foundation for the.
