Tusculanae Disputationes

This view he supports from a consideration of the insignificance of the pleasures of which we are deprived.

Tusculanae Disputationes

. If, then, there is no one miserable in the infernal regions, there can be no one there at all.

Tusculanae Disputationes/Liber V

Can any one contradict himself more? This view he supports from a consideration of the insignificance of the pleasures of which we are deprived.

I shall not treat of grief alone, though that indeed is the principal thing; but, as I originally proposed, of every perturbation of the mind, as I termed it; disorder, as the Greeks call it: and first, with your leave, I shall treat it in the manner of the Stoicks, whose method is to reduce their arguments into a very small space; afterward I shall enlarge more in my own way. Which condition of the two is the best, the immortal Gods know; but I do not believe that any mortal man does. Atqui de hoc homine a bonis auctoribus sic scriptum accepimus, summam fuisse eius in victu temperantiam in rebusque gerundis virum acrem et industrium, eundem tamen maleficum natura et iniustum; ex quo omnibus bene veritatem intuentibus videri necesse est miserrimum.

Cover has no visible wear, and the dust jacket if applicable is included for hard covers. Are you not acquainted with the first principles of logic? What old woman is there so weak as to fear these things, which you, forsooth, had you not been acquainted with natural philosophy, would stand in awe of? I could wish both, if possible; but it is difficult to mix them: therefore, if without a discussion of them we can get rid of the fears of death, let us proceed to do so; but if this is not to be done without explaining the question about souls, let us have that now, and the other at another time.

Cicero's Tusculan Disputations, On the Nature of the Gods, On the Commonwealth

It would be hard to say why; for I do not apprehend that any one, if a longer life were granted to him, would find it happier. An quicquam stultius quam, quos singulos sicut operarios barbarosque contemnas, eos aliquid putare esse universos? The Greeks held skill in vocal and instrumental music as a very important accomplishment, and therefore it is recorded of Epaminondas, who, in my opinion, was the greatest man among the Greeks, that he played excellently on the flute; and Themistocles, some years before, was deemed ignorant because at an entertainment he declined the lyre when it was offered to him. But I see we must not drop our philosophy.
