Magna Carta (An Embroidery)

Outer clothing and furnishings of woven silk and velvets were ornamented with gold and silver embroidery in linear or scrolling patterns, applied and , and small. Surface couching replaced underside couching, and allover embroidery was replaced by individual motifs worked on linen and then applied to figured silks or silk velvets.

Crewel Embroidery from The Crewel Work Company

The spots where the metal threads were pulled down moreover created a pattern on the surface allowing a hinged effect. The popular pattern of scrolling vines from which sprout a variety of flowers and fruits, and on which rest various birds and insects, attains its most exuberant expression in these garments. By mid-century, Berlin work was executed in bright colours made possible by the new.
