Imperative Clauses and the Frege

The indicative mood indicates something is statement of fact. The distinction between the two be-verbs ésser and estar is not entirely clear in our investigation, and one of our consultants prefers the imperfect subjunctive form of ésser, fos, even to express meanings which would be expressed with estar in the present. Critics of the Performative Theory charge that it requires too radical a revision in our logic. As applied to category mistakes, the former approach yields either a version of the contentlessness view or of the truthvaluelessness view—depending on whether one takes presuppositional failure to lead to a failure to express content or merely a failure to have a truth-value. See Portner for an overview of these types and references to the literature on these phenomena.

Although there obviously is something right in the claim that the indicative is connected to complements that are taken to be true, and the subjunctive is connected to complements that are not. The Performative Theory of Truth argues that ascribing truth to a proposition is not really characterizing the proposition itself, nor is it saying something redundant.
