Historical Prison Designs

The new generation prisons were similar in approach to the new wave prisons which preceded them in the sense that they both encouraged closer staff and prisoner relations.

Historical Prison Designs

The rationale behind such design similarity rests in the idea of escape prevention in medium-security facilities because many states may house violent populations in medium-security facilities due to resource constraints J.

Further, building costs can be reduced by using premanufactured components. This is similar to the approach of the new wave prisons, however HMP Woodhill has clearly advanced onwards from HMP Blundeston due to the fact the design was formed solely around the basis of fostering better relationships at the hope of aiding rehabilitation. Quality and Setting Quality correctional facilities should provide security and safety.
