Theory and Approaches of International Politics

Its functions are janitorial, meeting international crises when called upon by states; resolving international conflicts when requested; providing judicial judgments upon appeal; and above all, through the network of international governmental and nonintergovernmental organizations, providing an administrative structure for international transactions among states, groups, and individuals. Decision-making is often by consensus, but decisions may even be made by majority vote as in the all-member assembly of the International Civil Aviation Organization; and important decisions by the upper chamber of the world legislature the Security Council require the concurrence of the five Big Powers.
