No sexual assault on any victim was reported. Yatzenko's children were asked to take part in the documentary, but they declined. Natalia Ilchenko, the mother of the first known victim Ekaterina Ilchenko, recalled finding her daughter unrecognizable after the hammer attack and commented that the killers should not be compared to animals because they killed for fun.

The items were recovered, but all information on the phones was lost. Apart from big flour mills Jews owned sawmills utilizing the timber sent down the Dnieper River. The suspects then wash their hands and the hammer with a water bottle, and begin to laugh.

Sverdlovsk : путеводител'

The defense strategy for the other two suspects was to attack the prosecution on a wide front. A green Daewoo with a taxicab's checkerboard marking was often described as the vehicle used in the murders.

Dom boiar Romanovykh : путеводител'

The documentary also showed brief excerpts from a five-minute video of the murder of another victim of the maniacs, an unidentified man. The documentary was notable for showing a wide range of previously unseen photographs and video material from the case.

Dnepropetrovsk maniacs

The defense claimed illegal searches, improperly kept records, and problems during questioning. The lawyers for Sayenko and Suprunyuk launched an appeal, which was dismissed by the in November 2009. She had been carrying a bag filled with clothes.

Holdings: Sovetskoe Zakarpat'e :

The case was heard by a panel of judges chaired by judge Ivan Senchenko. The suspects had a strong alibi for the time of these murders, so all information on these crimes was removed from the case. Speaking at a press conference, Igor Sayenko and Vladimir Suprunyuk repeated their belief that the case was based on fabricated evidence.

The documentary also showed a video recording of Sayenko's confession, in which he admits that robbery was a motive for some of the killings. As she was passing through a wooded area, two men approached her and knocked her down. Lyakhov cooperated with the investigators to create sketches of the attackers.

Dnepropetrovsk maniacs

Pogroms occurred in Dnepropetrovsk and the vicinity on July 20—21, 1883, in which 350 homes and many Jewish shops were looted and destroyed. Immigration to Israel diminished the number significantly during the 1990s.
