Medication

One major cause involves inadequate communication with patients or between health care practitioners particularly during health care transitions.

Drug

Dizziness can be disabling in its own right and is also a risk factor for falls.

Today's Geriatric Medicine

In older adults, these symptoms may be diagnosed as Parkinson disease and treated with dopaminergic drugs, possibly leading to adverse effects from the antiparkinson drugs eg, orthostatic hypotension, delirium, hallucinations, nausea. Despite dissemination and knowledge of the American Geriatrics Society Beers Criteria ® and other criteria, inappropriate drugs are still being prescribed for older adults; typically, about 20% of community-dwelling older adults receive at least one inappropriate drug. It is very common, affecting up to 30% of older hospital inpatients, either at admission or during their hospital stay.

Ethical issues in geriatric medicine: a unique problematic?

Therefore, clinicians should be familiar with ethical dilemmas commonly encountered when caring for elderly patients.

Condition-specific considerations include benign prostatic hyperplasia and cognitive impairment.

Ethical issues in geriatrics: a guide for clinicians

Therefore, physicians should ask patients specifically about dietary supplements, including medicinal herbs and vitamin supplements. These drugs may treat the hypertension appropriately, but they may also cause peripheral edema.
