They are determined to avoid the errors of new democratic governments in Argentina and Peru, which rushed to improve wages and social services, only to find fiscal deficits and inflation forcing them into steep recessions. Determined not to let civilians interfere with their appointment, promotion and training process, they have recently prepared a set of new internal regulations. The junta considered it necessary to control all executive, legislative and constitutive powers and congress was closed.

SUCCESSFUL NEOLIBERALISM?: STATE POLICY, POVERTY, AND INCOME INEQUALITY IN CHILE on JSTOR

Job creation not only reduces poverty for those who find a job, but also, as demonstrated by income distribution studies in Chile, helps to improve income distribution in the new generations because human capital is more evenly available among different groups of the society. A value of 0 represents total equality, whereas a value of 1 indicates maximum inequality.

Are protests ending the 'Chilean model' hegemony?

The initial effects of introducing free market policies in 1975 was a shock-induced depression which resulted in national output falling by 15 percent, wages sliding to one-third below their 1970 level and unemployment rising to 20 percent. In fact, over the past decade, 19 million more jobs have become available, demonstrating that there are many opportunities for American workers to find jobs. As noted above, the United States imposes tariffs that add to the cost of selling products in the U.

CHILE: Democracy and the Chilean Miracle

With respect to social policies, many things were done, but they were done without ever losing sight of the main issue: allowing the economy to create jobs. Whereas business elites have constantly defended the capitalist modernization in Chile, renewing its justifications, the counter-offensive lead by the Kirchners and allies had further weakened neoliberalism in Argentina. A further factor differentiating neoliberalism's fate in Argentina and Chile is the role of the capitalist class. The person who's going to make the appointment for you wants a bribe.
