Morse, Katharine Duncan, 1888

But what was his horror and dismay, when he did so, to find her lying dead at his feet on the floor.

Morse, Katharine Duncan, 1888

And, as had happened twice before, the trout was there. Now the water in this well was so clear that everyone who looked into it saw his face reflected on the surface; and the proud Queen loved to come and peep into its depths, so that she could see her own picture mirrored in the water.

Gold

For she was thy first love, and, since she hath come to life again, I will go back to mine own people. The first illustration is by Barbara Brown and came from Cambridge Print and Book Gallery. The father deceives his wife and sends his daughter to another king to be married.

Katharine Duncan Morse

She was almost beside herself with terror at the thought, for she knew that it was for no good purpose that Queen Silver-Tree had taken the trouble to set out to visit her, and she felt that she would have given almost anything she possessed if her husband had but been at home. She would not let the poor girl touch her, but pushed her away as if she had been some evil thing.
